Two AAMU Employees Test Positive for COVID

Huntsville, Ala. ---- Alabama A&M University officials were notified on Monday, July 20, and Tuesday, July 21, 2020, that an employee tested positive for COVID-19 on both dates. Both employees had been on campus recently, but are now in self-quarantine, as they have undergone procedures for contact tracing. All individuals that may have encountered the employees have been notified.

While the University has not fully transitioned employees back to the physical campus, the appropriate building managers and supervisors have been notified to ensure that possible impacted areas remain isolated until a negative test is received. The University's custodial contractor, Aramark Facilities, has also been notified and is scheduling a deep cleansing of areas that may have been impacted.

University officials continue to work with the Alabama Department of Public Health (ADPH) to address COVID-19 concerns. The University asks that all employees remain vigilante by following the guidelines of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and the Alabama Department of Public Health.
